Love Lets Us Be Free

Gary Henry

“... pursue righteousness, faith, love, peace with those who call on the Lord out of a pure heart” (2 Timothy 2:22).

Love liberates us from the main thing we need to be liberated from: absorption with ourselves. Sin turns us entirely inward; it twists our thinking into a selfish shape. And if we’ve been sinning long enough that it’s become a habit, our thinking and our values, motives, desires, and goals have probably come under the control of one basic consideration: what we want. Even when we do good deeds for others, we may do them because, basically, such acts of kindness help us to feel about ourselves the way we want to feel. Sin captures us in a very selfish cage.

One of the grand effects of the gospel of Christ is that it frees us from this preoccupation with ourselves. Paul said that the goal or object of Christian teaching is love: “The purpose of the commandment is love from a pure heart, from a good conscience, and from sincere faith” (1 Timothy 1:5). This kind of love is the very antithesis of selfishness. It lifts us out of the bog of self-centered thinking and sets us free to enjoy a new and better focus. It gets us out of ourselves and into a connection with all those things external to ourselves that we were meant to be related to.

Love is clearly vital to our connection to other human beings, especially our fellow Christians. Without the self-sacrificial love produced by the gospel, we wouldn’t be able to love others, at least with the highest kind of love (John 13:34, 35). But what a difference the gospel makes! “Since you have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit in sincere love of the brethren, love one another fervently with a pure heart” (1 Peter 1:22).

But more importantly, love is vital to our connection to God. Sin is the root of the problem, certainly, and until that barrier is removed by the gospel, we can’t have any fellowship with God. But even with our past sins forgiven, there can be no fellowship if we remain self-centered. So if we’re Christians, we need to let our hearts be transformed — opened up — by love. “Let all those who seek You rejoice and be glad in You; and let those who love Your salvation say continually, ‘Let God be magnified!’” (Psalm 70:4).

Being Part of a Team

Jim Jonas

“I can remember when I was a kid just starting out and wanting to be part of something bigger than myself. For every high school kid or college player, there’s greatness in being the kind of teammate who truly wants to be part of the team ... There are special moments that come from a shared commitment, to play a role while doing it together. That’s what you remember – not your stats or your prestige, but the relationships and the achievement you [shared] through a group ... There’s great joy in that.” - Tony Romo, quarterback, Dallas Cowboys

Tony Romo is here reflecting on his declining status as the quarterback for the Cowboys. Having been injured earlier in the year, his rookie backup, Dak Prescott, is now the starter with an 9-1 record. But the point I wish to notice has nothing to do with football, or even sports per se. It has to do with a sense of belonging, of being part of something “bigger than myself” as Romo says.

You see, contrary to contemporary thought, it’s not all about me. The meaning of our existence must be broader and deeper than personal achievement, indulgence or notoriety. We are fundamentally social creatures, and we reach our height of value and fulfillment by mutual endeavors. Soldiers who together stare down death and save each other’s lives are bonded for life. “No soldier left behind!” they cry as they risk their own lives under withering fire to rescue a comrade.

Perhaps you have had a similar experience. Maybe it was a special work project; a school play or choir tour; a political campaign or a community project. At the end of a job well done, you know the exhilaration of working together, sacrificing, overcoming obstacles, putting your whole heart and soul into a common objective. You helped others excel, mature, accomplish more than they could have alone. Indeed, the sum was greater than the parts.

But all of this, and more, is what it means to be part of the Lord’s body, the church. When we enter union with the Lord as His servant and disciple, we immediately become part of a greater assembly, association and family of fellow believers.

“You are no longer strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and members of the household of God” (Ephesians 2:19).

“But you are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, His own special people, that you may proclaim the praises of Him who called you out of darkness into His marvelous light; who once were not a people but are now the people of God” (1 Peter 2:9-10).

This is true in a universal sense; that is, we automatically have global fellowship with all others who embrace Christ for salvation. We share core beliefs, common values and connected objectives. But it is also true that this universal bond becomes tangible and real at the local level where we seek for the like-minded in our neighborhoods with whom we can link arms and work together: “Now the multitude of those who believed were of one heart and one soul; neither did anyone say that any of the things he possessed was his own, but they had all things in common ... Nor was there anyone among them who lacked; for all who were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the proceeds of the things that were sold, and laid them at the apostles’ feet; and they distributed to each as anyone had need” (Acts 4:32, 34-35).

In coming decades these same Jerusalem brethren faced success and hardship together: tremendous popularity and growth; severe persecution; internal controversy; famine and eventually the total devastation of their city by the Romans. Through it all they could revel in the satisfaction that they were part of a bigger plan, a divine outworking that resulted in the eternal salvation of souls.

Have we lost sight of the bigger picture? The world exalts the meaningless, covets the fleeting, praises the trivial. I’m sure it would be pretty neat to be the quarterback for the Dallas Cowboys, but it pales in comparison to being on God’s team, doing our part to fight the cosmic forces of evil, rescuing the wounded and downtrodden, courageously defending truth, representing the Lord Himself in this broken, lost and dying world.

Not everyone can be a member of the Dallas Cowboys; only the select few will ever breathe that rarified air. But God’s kingdom is open to all, and its rewards far surpass throwing touchdown passes, winning Super Bowls and making obscene amounts of money. By the way, does anyone remember how many yards and/or TDs Tony Romo had at quarterback last year?

Pay Attention To What You Sow

Stacy Crim

This is a beautiful time of year to observe the harvest. The farmer had prepared his ground in early spring. The seed was planted, the tender plants cared for during the growing months, and now the days of harvest. The farmer has reaped what he has sown.

Reaping what one has sown is an eternal principle of God. Both in the physical realm (Genesis 1:12) and in the spiritual. 2 Corinthians 5:10) If our life has been that of righteousness, we reap eternal life. If it has been that of unrighteousness, we will reap eternal damnation of the soul. This principle is just and fair.

In the days of Hosea the prophet, Israel was about to reap exactly as they had sown. "For they have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind;..." (8:7). Planted within their lives was bits and pieces of wind as they departed from God. What they were going to reap at the end of their departures from God was a great whirlwind. The principle of reaping what we have sown behooves us to pay careful attention to the seeds that we are sowing.

We see this happening in life as sin is downplayed. Sexual immorality which leads to unwed pregnancy to abortion, partying to drunkenness to vehicular homicide, stealing shoes to stealing cars to bank robbery to murder. Reaping what we believe to be minor infractions (sin is sin) of the law of God, which leads to the whirlwinds of sin, heart wrenching sorrow, regret, and consequences. The end is an eternal separation from God in a place of utter ruin...hell.

Yes, we need to pay careful attention to what we are sowing.
